Operation Purple® Program

Military life can be tough. Between deployments, military-mandated moves, and other uncertainties unique to military life, military families often need dedicated time to reconnect, strengthen their family bonds, and develop the skillsets to help them navigate military life—individually and as a group. The National Military Family Association’s (NMFA) Operation Purple Program gives families camp experiences designed to serve each member of the military family.

In 2019, NMFA served 2,256 service members, veterans, and family members through Operation Purple Programs.

Operation Purple® Camp
Operation Purple Camp helps military children build resiliency skills and a network of support, so they’re better prepared for the challenges ahead.

Operation Purple® Buddy Camp
Buddy Camp is a camp experience for younger military children who aren’t ready for a full week of sleepaway camp. These younger campers, many of which are children of caregivers, get the best of Operation Purple Camp programming alongside mom, dad, or another family member.

Operation Purple Family Retreats®
Family Retreats prepare families for the challenges that result from military deployments and separations, helping them build the tools to stay connected and family focused in these phases of transition, absence, and reintegration.

Operation Purple Healing Adventures®
Healing Adventures give families of the wounded, ill, or injured the support, time, and space to adjust to their new “normal.”
Operation Purple Camp

According to Department of Defense (DoD) statistics, 55% of military children are between the ages of 6–18. On average, military children move and change schools 6–9 times from kindergarten to high school graduation. They must also cope with regular deployments, and sometimes welcome home a wounded, ill, or injured parent. Military kids face a tremendous amount of stress—and it shows. “One third of school-age military children show psychosocial behaviors such as being anxious, worrying often, and crying more frequently,” the School Superintendents Association reports.

That’s where Operation Purple comes in.

Since 2004, NMFA has provided more than 64,000 children a week of summer camp full of friendships, adventures, and memories. At Operation Purple Camp, military kids take part in activities designed to promote development of the emotional skills military life requires, physical confidence in their own capabilities, pride in their parent’s service, and recognition of their own sacrifices as military kids. They do this alongside all the fun of traditional summer camp: swimming, ropes courses, nature hikes, arts and crafts and, best of all, campfires and s’mores.

In 2019, NMFA hosted 17 weeks of camp at 15 locations nationwide. Camp locations were strategically located in areas that benefit the most military families, including 11 new locations for 2019. Camp applications rose 42% in 2019. NMFA was able to accept 32% of the 4,799 campers who applied.

In Their Own Words

Kids

“My favorite part of Operation Purple Camp was the friends I made and getting a bullseye with the bow and arrow. Being a military kid is hard sometimes. I know that sometimes my dad can’t be home for my birthday or school events. I know it is part of his job, but my mom is still there even though he’s not.”

Hayden (age 9)
YMCA Camp Chandler

“Operation Purple Camp was so much fun. I loved getting to ride horses, hiking, camp fires, and being okay without my mom for a week. I learned that I miss my dad a lot and he misses me a lot. But Operation Purple Camp helped me see it is okay to talk about missing my dad.”

Westyn (age 9)
YMCA Camp Jackson

“Operation Purple Camp made me feel less alone to know that other military kids also have to go through what I go through like frequent moves, making new friends, and having to deal with their parent’s deployments.”

Adeline (age 12)
YMCA Camp Erdman

Parents

“Operation Purple Camp allowed my daughter to connect with the 8 other teens in her cabin in a way I’ve never seen her connect before. She arrived at camp insecure and quiet, and by the end of the week was shouting out the camp songs and had completely emerged from her shyness. The benefits on my daughter are too numerous to count. A lot is asked of her at home. She has a parent who suffers from PTSD. She spends a lot of time caregiving. This week at camp gave her time with other teens and allowed her to be carefree.”

Kristine, Mom to Michaela (age 14)
YMCA Camp Widjiwagan

“In the military, service members do not have full control and lives are often dictated by the needs of the military. The future is very unknown, and this is a burden that military kids and spouses have to carry. Camp helped my daughter open up and share some of the burdens with other campers and staff. She came home more much relieved.”

YMCA Camp Cullen
Operation Purple Buddy Camp

More than a third of military children are under age six, according to DoD statistics, and two thirds are under age 11. Operation Purple Buddy Camp is designed for younger military children who aren’t ready for a week away from family. The child and their mom, dad, or other family member get quality, one-on-one time and create new memories away from their everyday stresses. While these youngest Operation Purple campers aren’t always ready for a full week of sleepaway camp solo, they are ready to enjoy all that Operation Purple Camp has to offer. Activities include canoeing, arts and crafts, swimming, archery, ecology lessons, nature walks, and a campfire (with s’mores of course).

The activities are fun, but the one-on-one time with a parent creates a transformational experience for young military children dealing with deployments and other challenges.

In 2019, NMFA hosted its first Operation Purple Buddy Camp focused on children of military caregivers. During the three-day Operation Purple Buddy Camp, the caregiver parent and child enjoyed activities designed to enjoy a respite from their day-to-day responsibilities, strengthen their relationship, and build community with other caregivers and their kids.

In 2019, NMFA hosted two Operation Purple Buddy Camps serving 142 military children and their mom, dad, or other family member in Washington and Texas.

“"I want my son to have the opportunity to participate in activities that I can’t provide on my own when my husband is deployed. I want him to have a childhood where he fished and hiked and canoed, but I don't have anyone to help him experience those things. I would also love to take a little time just to focus on him and to help him understand his feelings.”

Cheri, Mom to Benjamin
Operation Purple Buddy Camp, TX

“Now that our oldest son is getting older and I am back on sea duty and leaving every month for a month or two it’s becoming harder for myself to find things to connect with him with, aside from video games. This camp will give myself and Kai a chance to reconnect and get to know each other again! I’m leaving in August for 8 months so this will be perfect!”

Attendees

“Thank you NMFA staff for having us this past weekend. It was my son’s first camp experience and he really had a blast. I’m so glad that someone thought about the children and how many struggles they go through as their parent or parents serve. Thank you for showing the children how much they are appreciated.”

Naomi, Mom to Sawyer
Operation Purple Buddy Camp, TX

“This was my first time, by choice, leaving my wounded husband and special needs daughter as a dual caregiver to go enjoy a retreat. Thank you for this opportunity and experience as I will never forget it!”

Operation Purple Family Retreats

Every day, more than 200,000 service members are separated from their families by military duty. For these families, the separation itself is challenging, and when the excitement of a service member coming home wears off, there’s a new set of challenges that come with reintegration. Those problems are compounded by frequent back-to-back deployments, often with little notice. The family at home forges on through missed birthdays, anniversaries, and new school years, forming new routines along the way. Transition and reintegration aren’t easy for anyone.

Since 2009, Operation Purple Family Retreats have supported military families working to reconnect through these hard times. The retreats are a breath of fresh air, providing space for quality time and fun in beautiful camp locations away from home and giving families the opportunity to bond with others in the same phase of military life experiencing many of the same challenges. Families learn more about each other and the outdoors, developing valuable communication tools to help them better adapt to the changing military lifestyle while also enhancing environmental stewardship.

In 2019, NMFA hosted three Operation Purple Family Retreats serving 58 families in New York, Georgia, and California.

“Our family would like to attend the Operation Purple Family Retreat to have that time as a family and engage with our children in the hands-on activities with an unplugged weekend of togetherness. With back to back deployments and unplanned training schedules it is hard to plan family time and we think this would be a great opportunity to have that family time and adventure together we would be very grateful for it”

Teigh, Army Spouse
Operation Purple Family Retreat, GA

“Both my husband and I were deployed over the last two years. While we were gone, my mom and aunt were able to watch our kids, but it has been really hard on them (the kids). I feel like this camp would be a really good chance to reconnect and bond as a family. I would love the kids to be able to meet other kids whose parents have been deployed, and realize they are not alone. I know our kids would love to “camp out” at the beach. I want this to be something great they will remember: A fun time with our whole family.”

Families

“This was the best! We can put down the cellphones and communicate. I love nature. My family and I enjoyed the outdoor activities. We got to participate in activities we would not have been able to afford in a weekend getaway.”

Melissa, Operation Purple Family Retreat, GA

“At first the ½ mile walk to our cabin seemed so far. But with each trip, we were able to really see the beauty and notice new things like fuzzy caterpillars.”

Britany, Operation Purple Family Retreat, CA

“What an amazing experience. We unplugged, detached from the world outside of camp, and connected. We made new friends, pushed our limits in nature and slept soundly at night. Thank you for this experience! We’ll cherish these memories through the next 9-month deployment and always.”

Amanda, Operation Purple Family Retreat, NY

More than 52,000 service members have been physically injured in post 9/11 military conflicts and more than 500,000 are living with invisible wounds, from depression to post-traumatic stress disorder, according to the Wounded Warrior Project. Those wounds, illnesses, and injuries affect the entire military family.

Since 2009, Operation Purple Healing Adventures have supported military families learning to cope with their new “normal.” The long-weekend retreats provide a meaningful opportunity to connect as a family through activities designed to strengthen and renew relationships. The customized curriculum and activities are designed to accommodate the unique needs of Operation Purple Healing Adventures attendees. Credentialed mental health professionals with an understanding of military culture are on site to lend support and American Red Cross Reconnections Workshop trainers provide unique ways for families to connect with those mental health professionals.

Due to financial strain caused by injuries, families often do not have opportunities for vacations. Operation Purple Healing Adventures ensures families experience much-needed time together, while feeling supported and empowered to tackle the challenges ahead.

In 2019, NMFA hosted four Operation Purple Healing Adventures serving 68 families in North Carolina, Texas, Colorado, and Washington.

“I’m hoping being out of our normal routine and ‘out of the house’ will allow me to get closer to my family for one weekend. Before all of my injuries, surgeries, medical conditions and limitations, we used to spend a lot of time outside. Hiking was one of our family favorite activities, and my daughter to this day still asks when we’re going to hike again. This weekend will allow us to be together, outside, among other families who may suffering from the same limitations.”

Leonard
Operation Purple Healing Adventures, CO

“I would love for our family to be able to attend this event so that we can learn ways to become a strong family again. I want to be able to take stuff home that we’ve learned from camp and apply it in our lives. With so many VA appointments, the daily stress of everyday life and the busyness that we all have, spending quality time as a family will be really nice. Also, getting to be around other vets really helps me and I feel like more of myself again.”

Families

“The retreat gave us a lot of positive memories that we often refer back to. The kids had a blast and tried new things. I was happy to see my family enjoying themselves.”

Alisha
Operation Purple Healing Adventures, TX

“Our family traveled from Wichita, Kansas to Deckers, Colorado to attend Camp Shady Brook. The camp and staff were amazing. We needed this family time and it allowed us to bond and laugh and just relax. Everything my husband and I wished we could do over the summer but did not have the chance. THANK YOU for helping my family and giving us this amazing opportunity.”

Stephanie
